New York Evening Post.

It has long been believed by the public that nearly every species of food requiring any process of manufacture or refining in its preparation for use is more or less adulterated. Almost any house wife will declare her belief—amounting in her own mind to positive containty—that flows bread sugar, tea certainty—that flour, bread, sugar, tea, coffee, vinegar, butter, canned goods and many other articles, are adulterated; but, as she assumes that all brands and makes are equally impure, she does not trouble herself much about it until some special investigation shows actual danger in the use of certain adulterants. Among other things, baker's bread is generally bur-dened with a very bad name. It is we!! known that both organic and inorganic substances can be, and often have been, used in making bread. The organic adulterants are usually barley, rye, potato and corn flour. These cent generally be detected under a microscope. While they are undoubtedly anulterations, they are not at all hurtful to the stomach or the blade and their microscope. PLEASE, SIR, ONLY A LITTLE ALUM.

In European and other countries where flour is dear, all of these adulterations and prior therete. The object desired is to make the bread white, using a very poor flour. To thoroughly i ix the flour and sulphate in proper projection requires such great care as to make the procees too expensive in this country, where flour is cheap. It is a very dangerous method of whitening bread, however, as the presence of the copper can be detected only with great difficulty. There are frequent arrests and convictions in Europe for using chalk, white, clay, gypsum and alum in making bread. In America the use of alum has been regarded as almost universal for the purpose of producing a very white bread purpose of producing a very white bread from inferior flour. It is well known that alum is a constituent of several baking powders having a large sale, and people have come to regard alum as not only a necessary ingredient of bakers' bread, but also as one not very objectionable. This view is wholly erroneous. Alum, the oxide of alumna, is a powerful astringent salt. As found in the bread after baking, its active principle remains in such a condition as to be easily dissolvable in the gastric juice after having entered the stomach. When taken internally it produces dissolvable. ow how deleterious may be this form of adulteration it is easy to calculate its effect. A healthy growing boy or girl eat an average of a pound of bread a day, or one hundred pounds in about fourteen weeks. Now, take the amount of alum adulteration at the very low rate of two per centum, and we find that each mother,s darling cating adulterated bread has devoured two pounds of alum in a trifle over three nanths. Is it any wonder that household? Let any one who is disposed to doubt the evil effects of an alum-bread diet consult a good physician. The only pretense that is made by these public poisoners, the alum adulterators, to justify their trade is that the alum when baked becomes an insoluble earth which passes through the stomach without any effect upon it whatever. This is totally untrue. The active principle of the salt, before mentioned, is readily soluble in the gastric juice, and it is unquestionably so dissolved rapidly and fully. Let any one hold a piece of alum on the tongue for a few minutes and see the astringent effects on the coats of the mouth; and then fancy becomes an insoluble earth which passes on the coats of the mouth; and then fancy the effect of the same treatment of the del-

How Shall Sunday Be Used?

Simply as a day of rest it meets a most imperative want. Our American life is at best too hurried and feverish. We waste our strength in over-exertion. We bur at the candle at both ends and in the middle, and reap our reward in such a harvest of nervous disorders as perhaps was never known clsewhere. From the too eager strain and stress of the week Sunday offers a blessed relief. Its rest is incomplete unless the wonted current of ideas, as well as occupations, is interrupted. A first and obvious principle, therefore, is to get away from the habitual activities of the other six days, however good they may be in themselves. A teacher, for example should as a men. How Shall Sunday Be Used ? ever good they may be in themselves. thereto: A teacher, for example, should ex a gen al thing not teach on Sunday, but let the mind relax wholly from the attitude of instruction. So, a man who works his brain all the week can rarely afford to listen on Sunday to a sermon which his brain all the week can rarely afford to listen on Sunday to a sermon which keenly stimulates thought, though a service of beautiful and hearty worship may rest and refresh him. To say that no general rules can be laid down in such matters is obvious; the harder and more important thing is for each one to recognize that for him there is a good rule attainable, dependent on his character and circumstances, and that it is his business first to find it out and then to be faithful to it.

Must people are very willing to take Sunday as a day of rest, and resent any encroachment on their own rest. But the day has a higher function. It oughts to give moral guidance and impulse to the week. It is the time to take a large and calm view of one's life; to see what the rest of the commissioners, after life restrictions are what are life terminal to the commissioners, after displaced and are what are life terminal to take a large and calm view of one's life; to see what life restrictions are what are life terminal to take a large and calm view of one's life; to see what life restrictions are restricted. and calm view of one's life; to see what its real objects are; what are its temper and spirit. Much of the time we are so absorbed in details of living that we forget to ask whither it is all tending. The faelt of most lives is not that they are consciously directed to bad or low ends, but they have no distinct end in view; they are merely drifting. We do a thing to-day because we did if yesterday. We earn our bread because otherwise we should go hungry or stayen. We live from hand to mouth. Now, it is good that we should often stop a little.
